TGT unveils new Tuna Luna jig

As far as trends go in fishing right now, nothing may be hotter than the saltwater jigging craze. Rod and reel manufacturers are cranking out gear that can handle the task of taking huge fish vertically and with their additions has come a new set of deep-water lures. These jigs must not only be able to entice a finicky striped bass, but must also have the strength to endure the crushing punishment of a massive tuna and other pelagics. Not many baits are up to this task, but Tournament Grade Tackle's new "Tuna Luna" jigs are ready for anything.

Tournament Grade Tackle (TGT) is based right here on home soil in New Jersey, which is why their products are perfectly tailored for inshore and offshore fishing in our region. Their line of bunker spoons, spreader bars and rod riggers are hugely popular and have made TGT's gear a must-have among the blue water crowd. The company has an incredible reputation for quality that is backed up by an extensive pro-staff consisting of some of the most respected names in salt water angling.

Tuna Luna jigs are available in two styles, a "Squid" and "Anchovetta" that both weigh-in at a bottom dropping 7-ounces. They get their mass from a lead and bismoth alloy that rivals steel in hardness and resists wounds that toothy critters are known to inflict. They come fully rigged and ready to fish with a pair of 6/0 assist hooks and a 900-pound ring. The hardware is specially tailored to tame giant bluefin and other open ocean brutes. Both the Squid and Anchovetta come fitted with a light-stick chamber built into the body for the ultimate in night fishing; however, the versatile jigs are just as effective when the sun is high overhead. Their realistic darting action and color patterns draw strikes at any hour. The Squid style has a skirted head and comes with a spare skirt. Both Tuna Luna jigs are available in hot pink, vibrant green and yellow. The colors are base powder coated and finished with a two part epoxy that makes them near-bulletproof and keeps them healthy, fish after fish.

The Squid and Anchovetta are also available with an optional "Pro Tech" upgrade. The upgrade includes the patented "E-Chip" that has been causing quite a stir in every fishing circle around the country. Also included are two different sized scent tubes that can be fitted in place of the light sticks.
